ROLAND MERRITT BROWN, SR.

Major Roland Merritt Brown, Sr. was born 2 November 1923 to Dewey Brown, Sr. and Matilda Steele Brown in Morristown, New Jersey. He was one of three boys. They graduated from Morristown High School, Morristown, NJ. Major Brown grew up in Morristown and Newton, NJ. In 1945, he married Mary Lily Davis.

Major Brown attended Drew University, majoring in Engineering; however, his studies were interrupted by World War II. He was among the class of 1945 at Tuskegee Army Air Field, Tuskegee, Alabama. As a Tuskegee Airman and veteran of World War II, Major Brown served as a B-25 Bombardier-Navigator assigned to the 477th Bombardment Group. He never saw combat because the war in Europe ended.

After the war, he continued his studies at Lafayette College in Easton, Pennsylvania. Major Brown served as a Professional Engineer with the United States Army Electronic Command at Fort Monmouth, NJ for 30 years.

Upon retirement in 1981, he moved to Palm Coast, Florida. He retired from the Air Force Reserves and in 2000, he returned to New Jersey.

Major Brown was introduced to Golf at a young age by his father, Dewey Brown, Sr. His father was the first known African-American PGA Member. He became an avid amateur golfer winning many tournaments. He befriended and played with internationally known golfers such as Charlie Sifford, Teddy Rhodes, and Lee Elder. Among the long list of golf courses, he challenged was the picturesque Cedar River Golf Course in Indian Lake, New York, owned by his father.
